

18 EARTHQUAKE SHOCKS KILL 120; 4000 INJURED

MARTIAL LAW IS DECLARED; SAILORS AND MARINES CALLED OUT AS LOOTING FOLLOWS LONG NIGHT OF TERROR; CHURCHES BECOME EMERGENCY HOSPITALS

Danger From Feared Tidal Wave in Lower California Believed Past—Thousands Flee from Long Beach to Inland Points
—Additional Bodies Are Being Recovered

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Mar. 11.—The death list in the devastated earthquake area of rocky Southern California mounted today to 120.

As sailors and marines, called out as martial law was declared, cut into the ruins of Long Beach and Compton, the centers of the disaster, more bodies were found.

LONG BEACH, Calif., Mar. 11.—Looting followed a night of terror in this earthquake-devastated city, as morgues were filled with dead, and emergency hospitals, established in churches and public buildings which remain standing, treated hundreds upon hundreds of injured and dying.

Marine patrols announced 47 persons had been arrested for taking articles from stores, the windows of which had been destroyed by the dozen or more earth shocks which shook the city throughout the night.

Danger from a feared tidal wave was believed past today.

Thousands fled from the city to inland points on high ground when warnings were flashed that such a second catastrophe was possible.

The death list here was set at 56 early today, but was growing hourly. Despite the heroic work of doctors and nurses under almost unbelievable conditions, the badly injured were dying in hospitals and additional bodies were being discovered.

Sheriff's office officials said the dead would reach 200 but other sources considered this too high.

At least one thousand were injured, more or less seriously, while probably another thousand received minor injuries.

The alleged looters were taken to a parking lot where they were guarded by Marines with fixed bayonets. Cries of "lynch the thieves" came from citizens who were ousted from their homes.

More American Legion men were organized into flying patrols to guard the unprotected store windows. Few, if any, plate glass windows remained intact after the initial quake.

Even while the earth tremors continued, a committee of leading business men, after a hurried conference, telegraphed the Reconstruction Finance Committee at Washington for an immediate loan to restore the demolished buildings.

LONG BEACH, Cal., Mar. 11.—(INS)—New terror spread in this quake-ravaged city today as the death toll mounted to 56 here and the injured to 1,000.

Warning by naval authorities that a tidal wave might threaten the city sent tens of thousands of residents terror-stricken from the beaches where they had taken refuge.

Sailors and police rushed through the streets advising everyone to "take to high ground."

A steady caravan of automobiles running four and five abreast sped out of the city toward Los Angeles. Thousands took to the hills carrying bedding and other small possessions with them.

Periodically, sometimes only a few minutes apart, tremors shook the area, sending loose bricks hurtling down upon the streets.

Firemen estimated that the earthquake damage to the buildings in Long Beach alone might amount to $50,000,000.

Nearly all business buildings except some of the new structures were damaged.

Window displays were unprotected by any semblance of plate glass windows. National guardsmen and sailors patrolled the streets halting all who lacked proper identification.

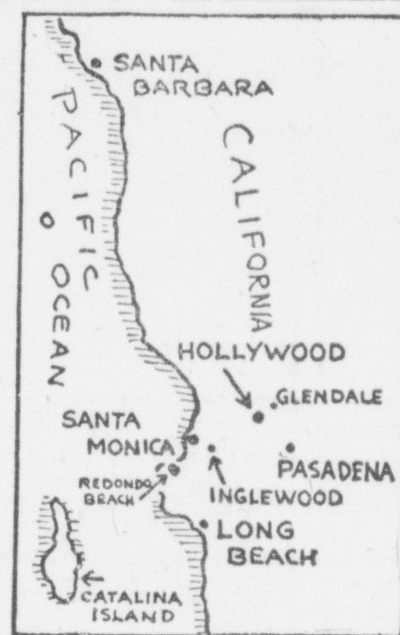

While a majority of the firemen remained in the city to guard against outbreaks of major conflagrations, many volunteers went to the oil field to battle derrick fires that imperiled refineries.

A long distance telephone building in Long Beach was shattered and all operators were ordered out, cutting off telephone service from the outside world. Telegraph service also was badly crippled.

MODEL OF A WHALER IS ADMIRIED BY PASSERSBY

Craft Built by Emidio Tosti Is In Mill Street Display Case

COMPLETE IN DETAIL

The excellent workmanship on a model of the whaler, "Wanderer," which is shown in a display case at Moffo's Shoe Shop, Mill street, is being greatly admired by many passersby. The neat craft, in splendid detail, was erected by Emidio Tosti, 342 Monroe street. It measures about two feet in length.

The boat is complete even to the details of rigging, life boats, and so on. The "Wanderer" was the most distinguished of whalers of American build, the description card tells. While at anchor awaiting a voyage south in search of sperm whales a West Indian hurricane blew her on Cuttyhunk Rock in Buzzard Bay. The ship was totally wrecked. This occurred in 1924.

The boat had been built in 1878. The "Wanderer" was a 228-ton craft, measuring 116 feet in length, with a 27-foot beam, and a draft of 15 feet.

BILL MAY PASS HOUSE TODAY

Washington, D. C., Mar. 11.—The bill giving President Roosevelt power to save more than $500,000,000 a year by reducing the Veterans' benefits and slashing salaries of government workers may pass the House today. The Senate, however, according to Democratic leaders, will not take up the measure before Monday and determined opposition was forecast there before a final vote is reached.

With President Roosevelt staking the success of his emergency program, in part, upon the balancing of the Federal budget by the principles of economy and the beer tax yet to come, all the power and influence of the new administration was thrown behind him. The Republicans, for the most part, were falling in line with the President's request for vast power.

Many Democrats were reluctant to commit themselves with a view expressing disapproval.

Meantime, the "big three," namely, the Veterans' Organization of the American Legion; the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the Disabled American Veterans, were mobilizing forces in an effort to modify the plan.

TWO BARNs DESTROYED BY FIRE, LOWER BUCKS

Nine Cows, Three Horses, Heifer, Bull Burn at Richboro Blaze

LOSSES TOTAL $18,000

In two fires in Bucks County yesterday, total damage was $18,000, loss including two barns, wagon shed, nine cows, three horses, a bull, one heifer, crops and machinery. The fires occurred on properties near Richboro and Southampton.

The first blaze, discovered at 10 a. m., in the wagon shed at the farm of Earl Casey, on County Line, 1½ miles south of Southampton, is believed to have started from the kitchen stove, the portion of the shed igniting adjoining the kitchen. The fire spread to the barn where this building with its contents of crops and machinery were a total loss. The tool house was also destroyed. The house caught fire a number of times, but through efforts of fire companies from Southampton, Richboro, Trevose and Hatboro, little damage was done to the dwelling.

The loss, here, which is on the former Samuel Vansant farm, was given at $8,000.

The cause of the second fire of the day in lower Bucks county is undetermined. The barn on the farm of Matthew Fink, one-half mile south of Richboro, was found to be ablaze a short time after Fink had gone into the town of Richboro. He was notified, as were also Richboro, Southampton, Hatboro, Newtown, Ivyland and Wycombe fire companies. No one was at the farm at the time.

The barn was a total loss. In it at the time were nine cows, three horses, one bull and a heifer, and these were burned to death. All crops and machinery were destroyed. A small chicken house with a few chickens also fell prey to the flames. Loss is given at about $10,000.

Bucks County Fire Marshal William L. Stackhouse, Hulmeville, is investigating the two fires.

The Senator was taken from the plane at County Airport and brought to the hospital by automobile. Mrs. Davis, notified at her Washington home, was expected to arrive today.

Illness of Senator Davis will force another postponement of his second trial on charges of violating the U. S. lottery laws. This trial was scheduled to open in New York on Monday.

INQUEST HALTED WHEN A WITNESS FAILS TO APPEAR

Coroner Sweeney Threatens To Ask Bond Forfeiture

ARGUED BY ATTORNEY

Finally Secures Continuance Of the Case Until Tuesday

A Philadelphia attorney argued with Dr. John J. Sweeney, Bucks County coroner, for nearly an hour yesterday afternoon, before the latter consented to continue an inquisition into the death of two women who were killed in an automobile accident at Parkland November 12th.

The argument ensued immediately upon convening of the inquest when it was stated by John J. McDevitt, 3rd, Philadelphia, that his client and one of the principal witnesses, Mrs. Jane M. Romagna, Fort Washington, N. Y., was not present. A letter was presented by Coroner Sweeney in which it was stated by Mrs. Romagna's attorney that she "would be out of town" on March 10th, and that it would not be convenient for her to attend, and that she would prefer not to appear at all at this or any subsequent date.

Coroner Sweeney was very pointed in his remarks concerning the tone of the letter, and for a time threatened to demand forfeiture of a $2,000 bond under which Mrs. Romagna had been bound to appear when summoned by the coroner.

Attorney McDevitt went at great length to explain to Coroner Sweeney that in his opinion his client, Mrs. Romagna, did not realize that she was to appear yesterday, but this supposition was not borne out by the letter from her attorney to the coroner. Mr. McDevitt declined responsibility for the letter, stating that it had been written from their Philadelphia offices, and that he had come to Bristol in good faith, and was apparently "in between."

Isaac J. VanArtsdalen, Doylestown attorney, represented Miss Edna Crankshaw, 1115 Arrott street, Philadelphia, who drove the car which collided with that driven by Mrs. Romagna. Miss Crankshaw was present, and ready to testify.

After considerable urging upon the part of McDevitt and agreement on the part of VanArtsdalen for a continuation of the inquest, Coroner Sweeney so decided, and fixed March 14th, at 3 p. m., as the date. "Personally I think that when two parties are involved both should be present when evidence is taken, and personally I want the guilty party determined," stated Coroner Sweeney. "But at the same time I don't like the tone of the letter and I think Mrs. Romagna has ignored our summons and is making too light of this case," he concluded.

The coroner's jury, consisting of Fred H. Kenyon, Harry VanHorn, Elwood Stackhouse, W. E. Ewing, John Smoyer, C. B. Hughes, had been impaneled and the inquest was ready to proceed when it was discovered that Mrs. Romagna was not in attendance.

The accident occurred on the Lincoln Highway near Parkland November 12th, 1932. Two women were killed, Mrs. Lucy DeLigny, 34, of 9130 48th avenue, Elmhurst, L. I., died immediately after the crash. Mrs. Richard Crankshaw, 52, of 1115 Arrott street, Philadelphia, was pronounced dead upon arrival at the Harriman Hospital, here. Miss Edna Crankshaw, 25, of 1115 Arrott street, Philadelphia, was injured. She was driving the car in which her mother was killed. Mrs. Jane M. Romagna, 38, was also injured and was taken to Frankford Hospital. She was the driver of the car in which Mrs. DeLigny was a passenger. They were proceeding to Valley Forge to witness a football game in which Mrs. Romagna's son was to participate.

ADVICE TO DRYS

A sane expression from the dry side, on the movement to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment, comes from Stanley High, former editor of the Christian Herald.

Mr. High sees ratification not as a national menace. A greater danger would result, he says, if ratification should be blocked. Defeat of the resolution, he believes, would mean nullification, "which would just as effectively release the country from the provisions of the prohibitory amendment as outright repeal."

Mr. High is not a champion of liquor. He regards the latter as an evil, and is not in favor of the drys quitting the arena. But he thinks a different kind of campaign is needed, and favors an educational program aimed at young people.

"What the dry cause needs," he states, "is not more pressure in Washington and at the state capitals, but more conversions among the constituencies," and, "If such a program comes out of the present situation, then I believe the drys will one day look upon the defeat for prohibition as a victory for temperance."

In temperance by choice rather than by force of legislation lies the solution of the liquor problem, he thinks.

This view represents a sane approach to the question. If the drys finally come around to it and make it their future program they will stand some chance of correcting the evils connected with liquor.

PARTY REGULARITY

The long life of political parties and devotion to them, sometimes running through two or three generations of a family, tend to obscure their real nature and purpose. People come to think of them as a kind of sacred and self-justifying institution. They are not that. A political party is merely an agency, a means to an end. It is a convenient and established way of getting things done, or of preventing evils from being inflicted upon the public. It has, of course, its traditions, its principles, its chief characteristics, but all these ought to be subordinated to its usefulness. If it ceases to serve its members, it is like salt that has lost its savor and is fit only to be cast out and trodden under foot.

There have been two major parties since the first administration at Washington because public opinion was divided. The parties were symbols of the two trends in public opinion. Where new parties have sprung up, it has always been because groups of voters found that they could no longer express themselves through the established parties.

While party regularity can be a virtue, it is not a vice to break away from one's party when its candidates or platform are at variance with one's wishes. Prohibition has caused more bolting than any issue in decades, and no one criticizes the wets and drys for concentrating their forces irrespective of party. That is about the only way the voter has of expressing himself on legislation and governmental policy.

The useful trait of a leaking fountain pen, we have found, is that you can put it into a drawer with a supply of postage material and cancel your own stamps.

CHANGE OF RESIDENCE

The Whyno family moved Wednesday from Cedar street to Bath Road.

CHAPTER THIRTY-SIX

At last she came, demurely clad once more in her gown of green, she reached the summit of the bluff, from which the path ran back to the encampment.

His pulses galloped. Pausing there just beyond the screen of trees, she whipped up by that pause his intolerable impatience. But he knew that he could afford to wait a little moment longer, wait until she had come within that green shelter, when she would no longer be within range of any stray eyes from the encampment.

But, as if further to try his patience, she remained poised there, looking away to her left, down the southern slope. And when at last she stepped under, within shadow of the palms, she was still half-turning to the left, and as she advanced, to his unutterable rage and horror, she flung up an arm as if in greeting and beckoning, and he heard her voice suddenly raised to call.

"Pierre! D'où viens tu à cette heure-ci?"

A moment later his furious eyes beheld the half-caste advancing rapidly with that long, loping stride of his, and answering her as he came, though what he said, Leach, in his seething, baffled rage, neither heard nor cared.

Not until Pierre was at last level with her did she turn to her right, and set out along the path by which she had come, the tall, lithe half-caste, in his cotton shirt and rawhide breeches, trotting after her.

Tom Leach made hissing noises through his clenched teeth as he stepped forth from his ambush, and moved to follow them. For once he was utterly without weapons, otherwise it is possible that he might in his madness have added murder to what else he contemplated. As it was, the long athletic limbs of the half-caste made him think twice about falling upon him with his bare hands.

He paused a moment on the path, watching them as they receded, and widened the distance between themselves and him. Then, without precautions, since he was no longer the stalker, he set out to follow. Instantly the head of the alert Pierre was turned to look over his shoulder. Having seen who came, and no doubt reported it, the two went on without change of pace, whilst Leach with a leisurely step kept in their wake, carrying hate in his evil soul.

By the time the Captain came level with the hut, Miss Priscilla had already entered it. From his tent, a little farther on, Pierre was in the act of taking the fresh water cask, to go and replenish it. He delayed but a moment over this, and was off again, almost at once, along the beach.

The Captain checked in renewed hope. Opportunity, it seemed, was to serve him after all.

He allowed Pierre to go some little way, before deliberately advancing to come and place himself before the entrance of the hut, from which the heavy curtain was lifted.

Within stood Miss Priscilla with comb in one hand and a hand-mirror in the other, to repair the disorder in her moist hair. As the buccaneer's shadow fell across the threshold, his face still oddly pale, his eyes glowing curiously, she stood at gaze, incomprehensibly perturbed.

He showed his white teeth in a wide smile, and doffed the hat from his short curly black hair.

"Heaven save ye, mistress," was his odd greeting.

And then before she could even answer him, the crisp voice and light, ready laugh of Monsieur de

Bernis sounded close at hand, reassuringly to herald his opportunity.

In the darkening brow and harshly twisted features of Tom Leach she read the need for that reassurance.

As the Captain stepped back, Monsieur de Bernis and Major Sands came up.

"Ah, Tom," was the Frenchman's easy greeting; "were you seeking me?"

"Seeking thee?" the other was beginning in scornful, fierce repudiation. But he controlled himself in time. "Aye," he added slowly.

"What is it?"

"Why, naught. I was just passing by, so thought I'd see if there was here. We never see thee at the camp nowadays. We haven't seen thee for days."

After that, dissembling ever, he spoke grumblingly of the progress of the work. It went slowly. It would be another four days, perhaps five, before they could get the ship afloat again. Was de Bernis quite certain that they were not behind time?

De Bernis reassured him. The appointed date for the sailing of the plate fleet was the third of July. It was certain that it would not sail before that date, probable that it would not sail until a few days later. No Spaniard was ever known to be ahead of time. Procrastination was in the blood of Spain. In twenty-four hours Leach could easily reach the point at which de Bernis proposed to intercept the Spanish ships, and he would prefer not to take the seas any earlier than was necessary.

With mutterings of reassurance, Leach took his departure. But de Bernis did not immediately turn, or immediately speak when he had gone. He remained standing there, looking after him with brooding, thoughtful eyes. He had discovered something queer, something uncomfortable, furtive, and constrained in the Captain's manner, qualities these not usually displayed by him.

At last Monsieur de Bernis turned to Priscilla. "Of what was he speaking when we arrived?" he abruptly asked her.

"You did not give him time to speak of anything. You were here as soon as he had greeted me." She laughed as she answered him, and scarcely knew why. All that she knew was that she wanted to laugh, in the sudden relief from the indefinable fear which the sight of Captain Leach's face had inspired in her.

"I have spoken to Pierre about his morning absence," she went on to say. "But he gives me no satisfaction."

"He has returned?" said de Bernis, and added sharply, "Where is he?"

"He has gone for water. He will be here soon."

"Gone for water?" de Bernis echoed, and his tone had changed. The eagerness that momentarily had gleamed in his eyes died out of them again. He shrugged as he turned away, leaving her alone with the Major.

She had missed none of this, being naturally alert. Trifling though it seemed, there was something odd in it, and it left her preoccupied, returning vague answers to the Major's idle chatter, as he sat there cooling himself in the shade of the hut.

Monsieur de Bernis had gone to Pierre's tent. He remained there until Pierre returned, bearing the refilled water-cask on his shoulder.

Watching and listening, she heard de Bernis greet him.

"Eh bien?" And the Frenchman's dark eyes might almost have seemed anxious as they scanned the half-caste's face.

Pierre lowered his water-cask to the ground. "Still nothing, mon-sieur," Miss Priscilla heard him reply in French.

"Sh!" De Bernis dropped his voice, and muttered rapidly, almost it seemed impatiently, ill-humoredly. She wondered was his master speaking to Pierre about his early absence. But from the manner in which the conversation had opened, she could hardly suppose it. She strained her ears. Probably it never crossed her mind that she was spying; had it done so, she would have accounted that all the circumstances justified it. The Major's chatter prevented her from hearing more than the murmur of those rapid voices. But in a pause he made, she caught again the voice of de Bernis.

"We have still five days, according to Leach, and the weather is fine."

"Too fine, perhaps," said Pierre. "It may be that."

Again they became inaudible, and so continued until de Bernis turned away, and came slowly back, his fingers tugging thoughtfully at his nether lip.

If de Bernis had admonished Pierre at all about his absence, the admonition produced no change in his habits. For when on the following morning, being dressed, Miss Priscilla lifted the curtain from her door, and called Pierre, it was de Bernis who came from his tent, dressed only in shirt and breeches, and carrying a tray that was laden with the requisites for breakfast.

"Monsieur de Bernis!" she cried. "But where is Pierre again?"

Smiling and speaking easily, Monsieur de Bernis replied: "I have sent him on an errand, Priscilla. But I will help you to contrive without him."

"You have sent him on an errand? But on what errand could you send him?"

"Jodel here's curiosity!" he laughed. "Shall I indulge it? Faith, not I. He has gone on an errand. That is all. Come, let us make ready before that ravenous wolf the Major awakens to be fed."

And that was all she could elicit from him, to her annoyance and even uneasiness; for her environment and circumstance were not such as made it possible to bear with equanimity a mystery, however trivial it might seem.

Tom Leach, deliberately and calculatingly watchful, observed from a distance the departure that morning of Major Sands and de Bernis. He recognized it to be in accordance with a daily habit that had become established, just as he knew that their absence commonly endured for a couple of hours. Curiosity as to whether they went so regularly had never really pricked him. After all, within the limits of Maudit it could have no significance.

If curiosity had not been aroused before, it was certainly not aroused this morning. Since yesterday the buccaneer had been wrapped in a moody absorption which seemed to render him indifferent to his surroundings. The disturbing vision of the bathing-pool abode with him so that he could see nothing else. Before his eyes swam ever the incredible beauty of that slim form, with limbs, seen through water, as white and smooth as alabaster, a loveliness such as Tom Leach had never suspected to exist in nature.

To the feverish, gloating contemplation with the eyes of memory of that irresistibly alluring vision was added an unreasoning, savage, torturing rage at the chance frustration yesterday of his intentions, and an unreasoning, savage, blind resolve to take amends for that at the first opportunity.

White Hyacinths

... to feed the soul

A GREAT department, one of the largest in the country, published a most unusual advertisement. "Buy something you don't need," it read. And there is a sound and worthy philosophy beneath that seemingly cold and calloused plea . . . a philosophy that has endured for centuries.

"If I had two loaves," wrote the Persian poet, Sadi of Shiraz, "I would sell one, and buy white hyacinths, to feed my soul." And throughout all history, men have sold their loaves to buy white hyacinths.

We would modify the exhortation of the department store. Buy something you could do without, but something you very much want . . . The antique chair you've been promising yourself. The new carpeting for the dining-room. . . The electric grandfather's clock, or the sterling silver.

Values were never so great, for the amount expended, as now. You have only to turn to the advertisements in this newspaper to be convinced. Here is written a story too important for you to miss. And very often you will find you may keep both loaves . . . and have your hyacinths as well.

It pays to read all advertisements in this paper

BRISTOL HIGH DROPS GAME TO PENNSBURG

By Oscar Cora
(H. S. Press Representative)

Last night, when the P. I. A. A. tournament began, the Bristol High quintet, winners of the Lower Bucks County League, met and were vanquished to the tune of 25 to 21 by the Pennsburg five, winners of the Montgomery County League. The game was played at Abington, a neutral floor.

It appeared to almost everyone that either "Lucky Luck" was not present at this game, or else that there were "hids on the baskets." Both sides had an extreme amount of trouble in scoring. The shooting was very erratic, with many bad breaks for either side. Bristol gained the lead in the moment of play when Cahill looped the cords for a twin-pointer and held this lead until the end of the second quarter, when a foul shot tied the score, 9 to 9.

The second half opened with Pennsburg making a four-point spurt, to put the score 13 to 9. Bristol was not to be so easily lost. By a couple of fast plays and a foul, Bristol again took the lead. This period ended with Bristol still leading by one point.

At this point the game proceeded fast and furious. First one team then the other would gain the lead. Finally with about three minutes left to go, Bristol tied the score at 21-21. In the remaining time, Pennsburg managed to score two more field goals, which won the game.

Dick Brown led the Bristol passers, scoring ten points, while Blank, the Pennsburg captain, also chalked up ten points, leading the red and blue team.

DO YOU KNOW THAT . . . Jimmy Lake, the good natured all round athlete of the Third Ward is not only a good basketball, baseball and football player . . . but he can handle his dukes in the ring in a very creditable manner . . . Jimmy was invited to give an exhibition of his prowess as a boxer at a social event in St. Charles' Church hall, Cornwell's . . .

and agreed to put the gloves on with Young Vito Della, another Third Ward lad who aspires to a fighting career in the squared circle . . . So good was the contest that the fans went wild with excitement at the manner in which these two slammed one another around.

Speaking of Young Della brings an amusing incident to mind . . . It seems Vito who sometimes battles in the professional ring under the name of "Young Chaney" was engaged to meet a Jersey brawler in Mount Holly some time ago in one of the preliminary bouts on the program.

The night of the fight the promoter asked Della if he had a license to battle in Jersey . . . When told that the Bristol boy had no license the manager immediately purchased one for him . . .

Della didn't do so well in the ring that night and after he left the pay office of the promoter he found that he hadn't done so well from a financial standpoint either . . .

When Vito counted up the money he received for the bout he found that he was out two bucks . . . The license cost two dollars more than he got for the fight.

Bristol-Burlington Rifle and Pistol Club . . . will hold target practice on the Croynon range in a series of practice contests between a team from this side of the river and one from Burlington . . . the first contest to be held Saturday, March 18, at 2 o'clock . . . Francis G. Ellis was appointed to draw up a schedule for the teams, booking two games a night. The following umpires were nominated for the season: Joseph Riola, George Burckell and Edward Roe.

Chester Felmer, James Dolan and Michael Riola were named on the Rules and Regulations committee.

A special relief train carrying 60 doctors, nurses and attendants, together with medical and surgical supplies, required two hours to go the 25 miles from Los Angeles to Long Beach because of obstructions.

Several wings of the Seaside Hospital, to which scores of injured were taken, were badly damaged. At the main surgery room of the hospital doctors were performing an emergency operation for appendicitis when the shock came. The outer wall of the room fell away, but the surgeons and the attending nurses remained until the operation was completed.

Within half an hour after the first shock, three babies were born at the Seaside Hospital and while their mothers were frightened by the recurring shocks, the youngsters were rocked to their lullaby in the nursery by the recurring tremors.
